

Editor's Corner

We are excited to introduce our introductory issue of editor's choice. Our objective in this feature is to provide Christian insights into prevalent issues facing believers today in a world that is predominantly secular with increasing anti-Christian sentiment.

We hear each week from Christians who are worried and frustrated with the secular beliefs of the world and its "gravitational pull" that has an effect on new believers and others by testing their faith and possibly even doubting their faith.

The adversary is very creative in his actions and efforts. With this being said we encourage all believers to stay rooted in prayer, biblical study and fellowship. Even as believers are a remnant in this world, some have a tendency to believe that since they are in the minority, maybe the majority has a point. Thus is one of the many allures of the world.

Most nonbelievers have already surrendered to the beliefs of the world. The world centers its enticement on pleasure and the "me first" emphasis. Because man has a sinful nature, since the fall of Adam and Eve, he is very likely to be tempted and drawn in by the allures of the world.

As a believer you need to be daily absorbed in the Word and prayer. Let the Holy Spirit guide you through life's trials by providing discernment and making sense of challenging situations.

As we go through the weekly issues of the Editor's Corner we will be addressing issues that are prevalent in today's world and considered by nonbelievers to be the norm and readily accepted. As a believer the Holy Spirit will speak to you and provide insight as you hear and encouraged to accept the standards and beliefs of the world.

We will provide biblical support for our input and will encourage you to not only pray on these points, but encouraging believers and unbelievers, within your influence to consider biblical input and not just randomly accepting the worldviews on face value.

There is too much said in the media today, online and even some churches that have become more like the world. The allure for these churches is that they believe that if they become more like the world their church, denomination and new members of their congregation will more readily accept their "world related" beliefs.

The path that we are encouraging you to take is to be one of strength thereby building your faith base and sharing it with those who are not believers.

As you read future Editor's Corner articles, we encourage you to send us your input on future issues to be addressed. Christians, we are in a battle! One that we will ultimately win! The secular world is organized and continually capitalizes upon man's need and desire for pleasure. We as believers know this is short-term thinking. There might be some pleasure in the beginning, but ultimately it will end with defeat. The Christian life can sometimes be plagued with pain and growth in the beginning of your walk, but ultimately it leads to victory and eternal life.

Thus concludes the first issue of the Editor's Corner. We trust this will be the start of many insightful articles to come!

Stay tuned and stay in prayer!

Blessings.
